Not all of our data are in the public domain, so we require registration

Not all of the content in BenchSci's database is in the public domain. In addition to data from open-access journals, we also present data from closed-access journals through our publisher partners, including Springer Nature, Wiley, Oxford University Press, and more.

While we endeavour to keep our antibody data free and accessible to academic, nonprofit, and government researchers, we can't make all of our content accessible to the general public. For the groups mentioned above, we use your email to verify that you are affiliated with an academic, nonprofit, or government institution.
